NOTES

DESCRIPTION

After crossing the famous Massif du Sidobre, we've got a real change of scene in this unspoilt environment at an altitude of around 400m, lulled by birdsong and the lapping of the stream! We've arrived, all we have to do is cross the bridge dating from the 16th century and we're in this magical place.

An old farmhouse set against the hillside, generously extended with terraces and annexes!

Push open the entrance gate and you'll discover a unique mineral world! First of all there's the bread oven, which was once the hamlet's meeting place, and then, as we look up, there are incredible walls, low walls, borders, paving, terraces and intimate little corners all over the place. We've never seen anything like it in our memory, what a piece of work on a mountainside, just a few years in the making!

Let's go inside now, and with our mouths agape we contemplate the masterly 135m2 living room that welcomes us. It's truly sublime, with its kitchen area that combines modernity and antiquity, with its stone sink and a fireplace with insert dressed in the obligatory Sidobre marble! There's a lounge/dining room area and a magnificent veranda that offers a different panoramic view at every hour of the day. A high-performance pellet stove sits at the back of the living room. We've kept the miller's staircase, which has been finished in white to give access to the first floor.

In the extension, a master suite with...
