Location:

Ideally situated between Albi, Toulouse and Carcassonne, Castres, the birthplace of Jean Jaurès, has a population of over 40,000 and is at the heart of a catchment area of almost 150,000 inhabitants. Its pastel-coloured houses, suspended above the River Agout, give it the air of 'Little Venice'. It is one of those towns with a subtle yet profound charm, combining quality of life, cultural dynamism and economic development. Its famous Goya museum, second only to the Louvre in terms of Hispanic art, its pharmaceutical industry with Pierre Fabre laboratories, its regiment, the 8th RPIMA, and its emblematic rugby team, Castres Olympique, need no introduction!

At the heart of the new Occitanie region, the department of the Tarn welcomes you to discover and embrace its culture of good living, rooted in its Occitan roots.

You'll also appreciate this department of a thousand faces, with its museums such as the Toulouse Lautrec Museum in Albi, the Goya Museum in Castres and Dom Robert in Sorèze.
